2 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Number 528, United States
3 against Hilton Hotels Corporation.

4 Mr. Walters, you may proceed whenever you are ready.

5 ORAL ARGUMENT BY JOHNNIE M. WALTERS, ASSISTANT
6 ATTORNEY GENERAL, ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

7 MR. WALTERS: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please 8 the Court: The relevant facts in this case were stipulated and 9 may be summarized in pertinent part.

10 In August, 1953 Hilton Hotels Corporation owned some 11 325,370 shares of the 366,040 shares outstanding of the Hotel
12 Waldorf Astoria, leaving some 40,670 shares of Waldorf out-13 standing in the hands of others.

14 Contemplating a merger, Hilton retained consultants
15 to do a study to determine a fair basis for exchange of Hilton 16 shares for Waldorf shares. Hilton and Waldorf agreed upon a 17 proposed merger, with Hilton to be the surviving corporation.

18 Under the proposed plan, Hilton offered to exchange
19 1.25 shares of its stock for each share of the Waldorf stock 20 it did not already own. Prior to the agreement of merger, 21 however, shareholders owning some 20,000 shares of Waldorf, 22 filed with Waldorf an objection to the merger and demanded 23 payment for their Waldorf stock.

24 Thereafter, on December 28 and 29, 1953, more than 25 two-thirds of the stockholders of each of the two corporations

1 voted approval of the merger. And on December 31, 1953, the 2 merger agreement and certificate of consolidation were filed 3 with the Secretary of State of New York.

4 The applicable New York Law provided that in such a 5 case the stockholder demanding payment for his Waldorf shares 6 had no right to receive dividends payable on those shares after 7 the close of business on the day preceding the date that the 8 Waldorf stockholders voted approval of the merger. And, that 9 upon that vote, the dissenting stockholder ceased to have any 10 other rights of a stockholder of Waldorf, except the right to 11 receive payment of the value of his stock.

12 Under the New York Law the dissenting stockholder or 13 the corporation had the right to have the stock appraised in a 14 court proceeding. Complying with New York Law, on January 7, 15 1954, Hilton offered to the Waldorf stockholders, $24.50 for 16 each share of Waldorf stock it did not already own. Those 17 stockholders who had dissented from the merger rejected the 18 offer and began court proceedings under state law for a deter-19 mination of the value of their shares.

20 Hilton again retained the same consulting firm to 21 determine the value of those Waldorf shares on the day prior to 22 the vote of approval of the merger.

23 In addition to paying those consultants, Hilton also 24 paid almost $40,000 to lawyers in others in connection with the 25 court proceedings to develop that value.

1 Hilton claimed a deduction as an ordinary and 2 necessary business expense under Section 162 of the Code for 3 all of the fees paid to the consulting firm, attorneys and 4 others, including the fees that had been paid to the consultants 5 prior to the vote of the merger.

6 The Commissioner of Internal Revenue disallowed the 7 deduction; Hilton paid the asserted deficiency and commenced a 8 suit for refund. The District Court held that the appraisal 9 costs were deductible, but that the consultants' fees that 10 were incurred prior to the merger were nondeductible capital 11 expenditures.

12 Hilton conceded as to those pre-merger fees and the 13 7th Circuit affirmed the District Court allowing deduction of 14 appraisal fees.

15 Q This was a taxable year 1955?

16 A This began in 1953, sir.

17 Q Well, the transaction began in '53; I would 18 guess probably the taxable year involved was 1954?

19 A '54.

20 Q '54.

21 A Yes.

22 Q How on earth did it take 16 years to get here?

23 A Mr. Justice, I cannot answer that; it seems an 24 awful long time.

25 Q It is an awful long time. This is a suit for

1 refund in the District Court. Is this explainable, just in 2 terms of the delays in the Northern District of Illinois and 3 in the Seventh Circuit Court of Appeals?

4 A Sir, that is part of it. I would assume that 5 in a situation such as this, where you have large corporations 6 involved, the administrative audits probably do not come until 7 late in the statutory period and then all of the proceedings 8 that follow that, keep eating up a little time.

9 Q Of course, it's only money.

10 A The sole issue here, then, is whether the fees 11 paid to the consultant lawyers and others, in connection with 12 the appraisal proceeding that followed the merger are deductible 13 ordinary and necessary business expenses or nondeductible 14 capital expenditures.

15 While we're concerned in this case with Section 162, 16 that deals with business expenses and also with Section 263 17 again, as in the last case, we nevertheless, are concerned with 18 the same basic principles that were involved in the Woodward 19 case.

20 Section 162 provides a deduction for the ordinary and 21 necessary expenses paid or incurred during the taxable year in 22 the carrying of the trade or business. It does not provide a 23 deduction for a capital expenditure.

24 Section 263, on the other hand, prohibits deductions 25 on a capital expenditure.

1           The origin and character of the claim with respect to 2           which an expenditure is incurred determines or contributes to 3           the determination of whether an expenditure is or is not 4           deductible. The costs of acquiring an asset of capital stock 5           are not deductible; they are nondeductible capital expenditures.

6           Q       What about the legal expenditures in connection 7           with the merger itself?

8           A       They are capital items, sir.

9           Q       They are not deductible?

10          A       No, sir.

11          Q       The lawyer fees for drawing up the merger plan 12          and effecting it are nondeductible?

13          A       That's right, sir.

14          Q       Capital expenditures.

15          A       That's right.

16                 Just as the Seventh Circuit noted below, the ex-17                 penditures incurred in connection with the corporate re-18                 organization, such as the ones that Mr. Justice White just 19                 asked about, are nondeductible capital expenditures.

20                 In considering this case alongside the Woodward case, 21                 there is only one additional item that we think we should 22                 mention. In Woodward the majority shareholder did not acquire 23                 title to the Quigley stock prior to the appraisal proceedings.
24                 Whereas, in this case, under the applicable New York Law, the 25                 merger and the acquisition were both accomplished prior to the 1 appraisal proceeding.

2 For this difference in timing is the only that we 3 think we need to address attention. The timing --

4 Q The Eighth Circuit decided this case first; 5 didn't it? Am I right?

6 A Yes, sir.

7 Q The Eighth Circuit decision in Woodward was 8 before this one?

9 A I don't recall, Mr. Justice, which came first, 10 calendarwise. No, sir; it did not.

11 Q It did not?

12 A The timing of the appraisal proceeding with 13 respect to title passage is immaterial. The appraisal proceeding 14 in this case, too, was directly and functionally related to an 15 integral part of the overall proceeding, which was a corporate 16 reorganization.

17 This was not a causal relationship; it was part and 18 parcel of the overall transaction, the corporate reorganization 19 and acquisition of the Waldorf shares.

20 Thus, again we note that the tax law does not permit 21 fragmenting of transactions. It requires the events that are 22 functionally related be looked at together, even though they may 23 be temporally separated timewise.

24 WE submit that such differences as exist between this 25 case and the Woodward case are immaterial and the context of 1 these cases, the differences in timing of stock appraisals is 2 not material.

3 And, likewise, the differences between the New York 4 and Iowa statutes are not material. The Federal tax rules in 5 the two cases should be the same. In neither case should the 6 cost of these appraisal proceedings be deductible.

7 In Woodward the Eighth Circuit held that the 8 appraisal costs were nondeductible, capital expenditures in-9 curred in connection with the acquisition of capital stock.

10 In this case the cost of the appraisal, likewise, 11 should be considered a part of the cost of acquisition of the 12 Waldorf stock.

13 In either case, the appraisal costs were capital
14 expenditures.

15 MR. CHIEFJUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Mr. Walters.

16 Mr. Levenfeld.

17 ORAL ARGUMENT BY MILTON A. LEVENFELD, ESQ.

18 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENT

19 MR. LEVENFELD: Mr. Chief Justice and may it please 20 the Court: The Government concedes that Hilton's expenses in 21 the appraisal proceedings are deductible under Section 162 if 22 they are not capital costs.

23 My arguments will be first directed to demonstrate 24 that the Government's contention is erroneous because the legal, 25 contractual and economic positions of the second shareholders

1 change from that of stockholders to creditors when they objected 2 to the merger and demanded payment for their stock.

3 I will then show that the merger and the appraisal 4 proceedings were not functionally related, so the rules with 5 respect to mergers are not applicable to the appraisal pro-6 ceeding.

7 Underlying both arguments will be an analysis of 8 state law, because without such an analysis, one does not know 9 whether an acquisition has occurred.

10 Q Well, would they have engaged in this process 11 of valuing the shares if they had not been going to acquire 12 them? Would there have been any occasion for all this expense?

13 A The occasion for the expense was not the merger 14 itself, Mr. Chief Justice; the occasion for the expense was the 15 objection and demand for payment by the dissenters and the 16 failure to agree on price.

17 The merger would have been effected in any event, 18 assuming two-thirds --

19 Q I was putting the emphasis on the acquisition 20 as distinguished from the merger, to the extent that you --

21 A The acquisition was not by Hilton, Your Honor; 22 the acquisition was by Waldorf. The stock ceased to be out-23 standing stock of Waldorf at the date of the objection and 24 demand for payment. Hilton was not acquiring the stock.

25 At the time of the objection and demand for payment,

1 the New York statute specifically provides that the dissenters 2 ceased to be shareholders.

3 Q Well, which was the surviving corporation?

4 A Hilton was the surviving corporation.

5 But, prior to the merger, upon the dissent, the 6 dissenting shareholders had to dissent prior to the vote for 7 the merger.

8 Prior to the merger they became creditors of Waldorf.
9 Hilton assumes the liability of Waldorf as a debtor to the 10 dissenters by operation of law upon the merger. Hilton did 11 not pay in its stock for the dissenting shareholders' stock.

12 There was a change of status of the dissenting 13 shareholders from that of stockholder to that of creditor.

14 The only evidence pertinent in the appraisal pro-15 ceeding was evidence as to values of shares, of the shares of 16 the dissenting shareholders. There was no evidence introduced, 17 or which could be introduced as to the value of the Hilton 18 shares or to the effectiveness of the merger.

19 A debtor-creditor relationship was established be-20 tween the dissenters and Waldorf and the debt of Waldorf was 21 assumed by Hilton by operation of law on the merger.

22 The relationship of debtor and credit is established 23 amply by the state law and case law citations in our brief.

24 After the demand for payment and the objection to the 25 merger, the dissenters had none of the attributes of 1 stock ownership. Under state law they could not vote on any 2 matters relating to the Waldorf or Hilton; they could receive 3 no dividends from Waldorf or Hilton; they could receive no 4 liquidation proceeds.

5 In addition, it has been cited by a Federal Court 6 that once a dissenter elects to receive payment for his stock, 7 he cannot bring a derivative suit in a capacity as shareholder, 8 even while the appraisal proceeding is in progress.

9 In addition, the dissenters had all the attributes 10 of sellers of stock, entitled to receive payment for stock.
11 They became creditors of Waldorf and then Hilton. Had Hilton 12 become a bankrupt they would have been entitled to receive 13 distributions from Hilton as general creditors, parity to sue 14 with other general creditors prior to any distribution to the 15 stockholders of Hilton.

16 In addition, this was held in Southern Production 17 Company versus Sobath, cited in our brief. In addition, the 18 dissenters would have been entitled to the Federal protection 19 of SEC Rule 10(b) relating to full disclosure with respect to 20 the merger, because they would have been considered sellers of 21 stock. And this protection would have been afforded to them 22 even while the appraisal proceeding was in progress. This was 23 decided in the Voegel case, cited in our brief.

24 As prior counsel has brought out, this Court in 25 Aspey versus Kimball, 221 U.S. would have decided, had Waldorf

1 been a banking corporation and had its shareholders been sub-2 ject to additional liability. This Court decided that such 3 additional liability could not have been imposed upon dissenters 4 who had elected appraisal rights.

5 Q What happened to the stock? Was it held as 6 Treasury stock or was it cancelled, or do you know?

7 A The -- as I read the statute, Mr. Justice, 8 the stock became Treasury stock and Waldorf was obligated to 9 pay for it, at its fair value.

10 Q What did -- how was the purchase price of the 11 stock handled? I mean, taxwise; is that concededly a capital 12 expenditure?

13 A That is concededly a capital expenditure.

14 Q Why do you concede that?

15 A I conceded that, Your Honor, because of the 16 fact that it was unnecessary for Hilton to exchange the one-and-17 a quarter shares for these shares that had ceased to become 18 outstanding shares of Waldorf.

19 Q Why wasn't the expenditure for the actual price 20 of the stock, why wasn't that as deductible as the miscellan-21 eous expenses connected with the acquisition?

22 A My point, Your Honor, is that the miscellaneous 23 expenses are not connected with the acquisition. They are not 24 -- there is no functional relationship between the acquisition 25 and these expenditures.

1 Q No functional --

2 A No functional relationship.

3 My point --

4 Q You mean that you would have incurred these 5 expenditures anyway if you hadn't acquired the stock?

6 A It wasn't that; it was because we could not 7 agree on price that we incurred these expenditures.

8 Q But you still wanted to buy the stock.

9 A We had already acquired the stock, Your Honor.

10 Q I suppose you could have -- could you have 11 backed down on it?

12 A We could not have backed out of it, nor could 13 have the dissenting shareholders.

14 Q But you knew in advance of the merger that if 15 anybody dissented you would have to buy the stock.

16 A We knew that if they did exercise their rights 17 we would have had to buy the stock.

18 Q But if, certainly absent some dissent and ab-19 sent the acquisition of stock, you wouldn't have made these 20 expenditures?

21 A That is correct, Your Honor, after the creation 22 of an obligation on the part of Waldorf, assumed by Hilton to 23 pay for the stock, the appraisal proceedings would not have 24 been made.

25 The dissenters, when they dissented and demanded

1 payment, elected to sell their shares under terms set forth by 2 the State of New York.

3 The State of New York determined who the parties to 4 the sale were, the number of shares to be sold and the date of 5 the sale.

6 In the State of New York, by statute also determines 7 the purchase price of the shares. The State of New York 8 determined that the purchase price of the shares was the value 9 of the shares on the day before the meeting of Waldorf, 10 approving the merger.

11 Neither party, neither the dissenter nor Hilton 12 could vary the price to be paid for the shares. This is some-13 what similar to the situation in Kieselbach versus Commissioner 14 317 U.S., where this Court said that the purchase price of a 15 condemnation proceeding is settled as of the date the property 16 was taken.

17 The appraisal proceeding was not part of an acquisi-18 tion process because the parties were not negotiating as to a 19 mutually-acceptable terms as a condition to sale. This is not 20 analogous to finding a buyer by paying a broker a commission.
21 nor is it analogous to the parties bargaining as to the condi-22 tion of sale as to purchase price. Without an agreement to 23 purchase price, there would have been no sale in the ordinary 24 circumstance. In this circumstance the purchase price had been 25 imposed upon by the State and the sale had been imposed upon

1 the party by the state once the election was made.

2 This is not in any way analogous to attorneys pre-3 paring documents to consummate a sale, without the signing of 4 which there would be no sale.

5 This was a complete sale not subject to renegotiation
6 by either party to the sale. The dissenters could not uni-7 laterally cancel their dissent and resume their status as 8 shareholders of Hilton. They were in the same position as a 9 private seller who has sold his stock and he deferred payment 10 and the payment could either have been a fixed purchase price 11 or a formula purchase price or a price to be determined by an 12 objective standard, such as the State of New York in this case 13 said it would be; the objective standard being fair value.

14 After the demand for payment the shareholder -- the 15 dissenters had no interest in Waldorf as shareholders. They 16 were not interested in whether the price of Waldorf stock went 17 up or down; they were not interested in whether the price of 18 Hilton stock went up or down. They ceased to have any in-19 terest as equity owners and merely were creditors.

20 This --

21 Q Well, what if a buyer and seller sign a con-22 tract for the purchase of the assets of the company and they 23 sign a contract; both sides are obligated and they accept to 24 go through with the transaction and they set the price of every 25 item except one piece of real property over which they can't

1 agree, but they both agree that a named appraiser will set the 2 value and that's the price that will be paid and then the 3 appraiser sets it and he charges a good stiff fee and 4 they split it. What about the buyer there on that appraisal 5 fee; doesn't he have to capitalize that expense?

6 A I would think, Your Honor, that that is part 7 of the agreement as to purchase price prior to the consummation 8 of the sale.

9 Q But he doesn't know what it is going to be.

10 A But they have agreed that it will be what is 11 determined by the appraiser.

12 Q Well, your answer is: "Yes, it would be a 13 capital expense."

14 A The answer is: it probably would be a capital 15 expense.

16 The public policy in the State of New York in this, 17 appears to be very correct, because if the Waldorf dissenters
18 could resume their status as shareholders, and Hilton stock 19 were to have gone higher, they could have taken advantage of the 20 increase in price of Hilton stock, while in any event, having 21 a downward protection, because if Hilton stock went lower they 22 could always have their demand for fair value of their stock.

23 The fact that the dissenters did not have this choice, 24 demonstrates once again that they were in a position not as 25 shareholders when the appraisal proceeding was commenced, but as

1 creditors, and the purpose of the appraisal proceedings was to 2 determine the amount owed to them as creditors.

3 In summary on this point: the dissenters have sold 4 their stock on the date they objected to the merger and de-5 manded payment for their stock. They had no claim against 6 Waldorf or Hilton as shareholders and they had only the right 7 to receive payment.

8 And all of these events had occurred prior to the 9 appraisal proceeding. The appraisal proceeding could, in no 10 way, affect the acquisition. The appraisal proceeding was not 11 an equitable proceeding to revise or modify the terms of the 12 sale and it was not necessary to achieve an enforceable bargain, 13 because an enforceable bargain had been imposed by the State of 14 New York.

15 It was also not necessary to achieve the essential 16 formalities of the sale because those formalities were taken 17 care of by law. And it was not necessary to establish accept-18 able terms of acquisition because the terms of acquisition had 19 been imposed by law.

20 The appraisal proceeding was not part of the cost of 21 acquisition, because the shares were acquired prior thereto and 22 the appraisal proceeding had no effect on the acquisition.

23 Title involvement has always been a necessary element 24 to determine whether an item is to be capitalized as being 25 part of the cost of acquisition, protection or defense of title.

1 because one cannot acquire title or acquire anything without 2 title being involved.

3 Title involvement, this necessary touchstone is 4 absent from the appraisal proceedings, because title to the 5 shares of stock of the dissenters passed from them long before 6 the appraisal proceeding was started.

7 Most of the Government cases citing the application
8 of the Winmill rationale involve title, so the cases cited 9 by the Government are clearly not applicable. And if the cases 10 didn't involve title, they involved a recasting of sales price 11 by a court with respect to a sale induced by fraud. Again, a 12 bargaining process.

13 Or the cases involving the reaching of an agreement 14 as to price prior to title being passed or the cases involved 15 in taking the necessary steps to consummate the sale.

16 The more appropriate cases as authority for this 17 case is the case of Petschek, decided by the SEcond Circuit, 18 involving a confiscation proceeding. In that case the taxpayer's 19 property was confiscated by a foreign government and the pro-20 ceeding determining the award was based upon the value of the 21 property confiscated.

22 There the Second Circuit held that the legal costs 23 in the proceedings were deductible. Another relevant case is 24 the Naylor case decided by the Fifth Circuit. In that case, 25 an option was exercised to purchase the stock and the parties

1 agreed that title would pass, but the option price was set at 2 the book value of the shares of stock at a certain date, and 3 the taxpayer hired an attorney because a dispute arose as to 4 book value.

5 The attorney's fees were held to be deductible be-6 cause title had passed before the attorney was hired and he 7 was hired merely to collect an express amount of the purchase 8 price, which was a standard set by agreement among the parties 9 of book value.

10 The Government's reliance upon title cases is mis-11 placed and rather the Petschek case and the Naylor case are 12 more appropriate.

13 The Government contends that the origin and character 14 of the appraisal proceedings was in the merger. Essentially 15 the argument is: had there been no merger there would be no 16 appraisal proceedings. But the cause of the appraisal pro-17 ceedings was not the merger; the cause of the appraisal pro-18 ceedings was in the objection and demand for payment by the 19 dissenters. Had there been no such objection or demand for 20 payment there would be no appraisal proceedings.

21 The merger had been completed and the dissenters did 22 not affect the merger. The acquisition of the dissenters' 23 stock had been completed, and the dissenters could not affect 24 such acquisition. It was not from the merger or as a part in the 25 acquisition that the appraisal proceedings arose; it was from

1 creditor relationship relationship established between the 2 dissenters and Waldorf, and the fact that they couldnot agree 3 on the fair value of the dissenters' shares.

4 There was no functional relationship between the 5 appraisal proceedings and the merger and the rules with respect 6 to mergers should not apply.

7 The Government states that distinctions in state law
8 should not govern Federal tax consequences. And the Government 9 in its brief cites cases where there was no substantive dif-
10 ference in state law or where state law put different labels 11 on the same property as authority for this statement.

12 However, we all know that in private contracts trying 13 to accomplish similar ends, different tax consequences can de-14 pend upon title.

15 There is one case in the lower courts, other than 16 Woodward, in which the appraisal proceedings -- the expense of 17 the appraisal proceedings were held to be deductible. This is 18 a District Court case, Boulder Building Corporation and it 19 was decided under an appraisal statute at 18 Oklahoma Statutes 20 Annotated 1.161(a) 1953.

21 I will quote this statute to you: "Holders of dis-22 senting shares of a domestic corporation shall continue to have 23 all the rights and privileges incident to their shares except 24 as expressly limited by this section until such time as the 25 fair value of such shares be agreed upon or determined by a

1 judgment."

2 There were no appreciable limitations under this 3 statute.

4 I submit that under the Oklahoma statute the dissenters
5 remained shareholders and they could have resumed their status 6 as shareholders, which is entirely different than the state law 7 in New York when they have forever lost their status as share-8 holders.

9 The Government says: ignore title when you decide 10 this case, but one must always be concerned with title if one 11 is going to impose a capitalization because title acquisition 12 is involved.

13 Hilton does not urge the use of the primary purpose 14 test in this case because the sole purpose of the appraisal 15 proceeding was to determine the value of the shares, the amount 16 of the debt owed by Hilton and there was no element of title 17 involved in the appraisal proceeding.

18 Q Well, again, it sounds to me on that argument 19 that you could, if you are right, you should be able to deduct 20 the price that was set in the appraisal.

21 A Your Honor, I think there is a distinction be-22 tween setting a price and paying a price. We had agreed -- 23 Hilton had agreed to pay a price. It was a price that was 24 imposed upon it by state law and the state law had evolved a 25 procedure to determine the price. We are questioning -- the 1 problem we have is to categorize the expenses in determining 2 the price. There is no question that the price itself is -- 3 was for an acquisition.

4 Title was not involved in the price determination 5 procedure. The title was involved in the acquisition which 6 had occurred before the price-determining proceeding.

7 In summary, the expenses of Hilton in the appraisal 8 proceeding should not be capitalized because title was not 9 involved in the appraisal proceeding and Hilton acquired nothing 10 as a result of the appraisal proceeding.

11 In addition, the appraisal proceeding, having resul-12 ted from the demand for payment and the inability for the 13 debtor-creditor to agree on price was not functionally related 14 to the merger, so the merger rules should not apply.

15 It is respectfully submitted that Hilton's expenses
16 in the appraisal proceeding are ordinary and necessary expenses 17 deductible under Section 162 of the Internal Revenue Code.

18 Thank you.

19 MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: Thank you, Mr. Levenfeld.

20 Mr. Walters.

21 REBUTTAL ARGUMENT BY JOHNNIE M. WALTERS, ASSISTANT
22 ATTORNEY GENERAL, ON BEHALF OF PETITIONER

23 MR. WALTERS: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it please 24 the Court: I'll just mention one or two items briefly.

25 Again, we submit that these two cases bring to this

1 Court two instances where taxpayers would deduct the cost of 2 determining the value of capital stock, which capital stock had 3 to be acquired in one instance by individual taxpayers; in the 4 other by a corporation in connection with corporate action.

5 The fact that the timing of these costs came either 6 before or after we submit, is immaterial. These costs were 7 incurred at the part and parcel of the overall transaction in 8 each instance.

9 Accordingly, we submit that the Court should decide 10 these two cases alike. The Eighth Circuit held that they were 11 capital expenditures in the Woodward case. In the Hilton case 12 the Seventh Circuit held they were deductible.

13 We think that the Eighth Circuit is right and that 14 the Seventh Circuit is wrong, but we submit most urgently that 15 whatever this answer is we need one rule. These are not 16 isolated instances. There are many, many corporate reorganiza-17 tions, mergers and other items, actions taking place today where 18 this is going to be a recurring event, so we need a rule for 19 taxpayers and the government alike.

20 Q Are there other decisions in the lower courts 21 where the courts have gone in opposite directions?

22 A Mr. Justice, there are several decisions --

23 Q Some in the District Courts.

24 A Yes, sir, where they have gone both ways, 25 really.

1           We submit that the better view is that applying in 2 the Woodward case, because we do not see how you can separate 3 out this appraisal proceeding which is required to determine 4 the value or the price of the stock from the overall transac-5 tion.

6           Now, as to the possible distinctions between the two 7 statutes involved in these cases, again we say they are imma-8 terial, because if you tread away the brush and look at the 9 main transactions that we have here, it seems clear to us that 10 these expenditures were incurred in the purchase of capital 11 stock. We don't see how you can find otherwise when you look 12 at the whole picture.

13           We mentioned very briefly the point that Mr. Justice 14 White has brought out in questioning, that if Hilton felt that 15 the timing was as important as it is, then we submit that they 16 could very well have justified, at least arguably, deducting 17 the cost of price that they paid for the stock, too, because 18 that came before the acquisition, also.

19           In fact, we submit that the concession by Hilton that 20 the pre-merger expenses incurred, expenditures for the con-21 sultant constitutes nondeductible capital expenditures indi-
22 cates that they, too, feel that the decision in the Woodward 23 case is correct.

24           MR. LEVENFELD: Mr. Chief Justice, I would like a 25 few minutes in rebuttal.

MR. CHIEF JUSTICE BURGER: I guess you have -- excuse me. We've got our two cases here, just let me get unsorted.

You have no rebuttal left. Mr. Walters was in rebuttal on this case; you have exhausted all your time.

(Whereupon, at 11:50 o'clock a.m. the argument in the above-entitled matter was concluded)
