3 CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST: We'll hear argument
4 now in No. 02-1080, the General Dynamics Land Systems, 5 Inc. v. Dennis Cline.

6 Mr. Verrilli.

7 ORAL ARGUMENT OF DONALD B. VERRILLI

8 ON BEHALF OF THE PETITIONER

9 MR. VERRILLI: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
10 please the Court:

11 The very essence of age discrimination is the 12 disparate treatment of older workers based on the false 13 assumption that productivity and competence decline with 14 old age. The Age Discrimination in Employment Act 15 protects workers 40 and older from that kind of disparate 16 treatment. It should not be stretched to cover claims by 17 workers 40 and older that they have been treated 18 disparately on the basis of their comparative youth.

19 QUESTION: Well, Mr. Verrilli, it - perhaps you 20 can say that the language in the statute, because of an 21 individual age - individual's age - is somehow ambiguous.
22 But to what extent do we have to give some deference to 23 the agency position on the thing? Because the Government 24 is here taking a position contrary to yours based on 25 agency interpretation.

1 MR. VERRILLI: They - they are, Justice O'Connor.
2 That interpretation deserves no deference for three 3 reasons, which I'd like to summarize and then first 4 elaborate on. The first is that, under Chevron, the 5 question - the question of deference is not dependent on 6 whether there's a definitional ambiguity in the - in the 7 specific operative language, in this case of Section 8 623(a), but on what the - what that language means as read 9 in the context of the Act. And Chevron says, using all of 10 the traditional tools of statutory construction, and 11 applying that test we submit, as - as I hope to elaborate 12 this morning, one cannot come to the conclusion that there 13 - there - that this statute can be fairly read to 14 authorize the kinds of youth discrimination claims that 15 are at issue here.

16 The second reason, however, is that even if 17 there were - even if there were ambiguity in general, 18 which we submit there is not, under the holding, the 19 express holding in Mead, the - the EEOC's regulation here 20 is not entitled to Chevron deference, and the reason for 21 it is this, and this is at page 227 of the Mead opinion in 22 533 U.S. The very sentence that states the holding in 23 Mead says, a regulation is entitled to Chevron deference 24 if it is - if it is promulgated in the - if the agency has 25 been given by Congress the authority to promulgate rules

1 with the force of law, and we acknowledge that is true
2 here.

3 But the second half of the test - this is in the 4 statement of the holding in Mead - is that the rule has to 5 be promulgated in an exercise of that authority, and the 6 regulation that the EEOC is here defending today was not a 7 - a rule that was given the force of law by the agency.
8 In fact, the agency made - the Department of Labor, when 9 it initially promulgated this regulation, made a 10 deliberate decision not to promulgate it as a rule with 11 the force of law, but instead to promulgate it solely as 12 guidance to the public about its - about its enforcement 13 authority and it was -

14 QUESTION: How - how do we know that?

15 MR. VERRILLI: Because that is what the 16 Department of Labor said in the Federal Register when it 17 promulgated this.

18 QUESTION: What - what - what did it say
19 specifically?

20 MR. VERRILLI: It said, we are promulgating this 21 as a matter of enforcement guidelines for the - guidance - 22 so the public knows how we intend to enforce the - the - 23 the statute. It did not promulgate a rule of law. And 24 then when it was re-promulgated by the EEOC in 1981 - and 25 again, the cites for this are on page 17 of our reply

1 brief - when it was re-promulgated by the EEOC in 1981, 2 the EEOC made a deliberate choice, which it explained in 3 the Federal Register, not to have this be a substantive 4 rule with the force of law, and in fact it did not comply 5 with, and stated it was not going to comply with, the 30-6 day notice period that is required for substantive rules 7 of law so that -

8 QUESTION: Well, if we could call this an 9 enforcement position or an enforcement policy on the part 10 of the agency, and you're going to probably say we can't - 11 shouldn't call it that - but if we could, doesn't the 12 Government get some deference? You say it gets no 13 deference at all?

14 MR. VERRILLI: If - well, it would get Skidmore
15 deference, Justice Kennedy, and I think Christensen 16 specifically says that, that it gets Skidmore deference if 17 it's an enforcement guideline and not - and not a - a rule
18 of law - substantive rule of law. But here, Skidmore -
19 applying Skidmore, no deference is due to this regulation 20 principally because it is a regulation that the - that has 21 not been enforced in anything like a consistent manner.
22 To the contrary -

23 QUESTION: That - that's a different issue, but 24 let's - let's come back to the point of whether it is 25 promulgated as an interpretive regulation or a substantive

1 regulation. You are taking the position that only 2 substantive regulations are entitled to Chevron deference?

3 MR. VERRILLI: The - the holding in Mead, Justice
4 Scalia -

5 QUESTION: Only - only - only substantive
6 regulations? Mead does not say that.

7 MR. VERRILLI: The - the holding in - the 8 sentence that's in Mead that says -

9 QUESTION: All of the regulations of the SEC, for 10 example, virtually all of them are interpretive 11 regulations.

12 MR. VERRILLI: The question under Mead is whether 13 it was a regulation that was promulgated that - that has 14 the force of law, and they -

15 QUESTION: No, but your - your - point is -

16 QUESTION: That does not equate with 17 interpretive.

18 MR. VERRILLI: Not necessarily. But here they 19 made a deliberate decision that it wasn't going to have 20 the force of law and they, for example, in 1981 -

21 QUESTION: No, they didn't. They - they 22 promulgated it, on page 17 of your brief, as an 23 interpretation rather than a substantive regulation, and 24 that's what it is.

25 MR. VERRILLI: Right, right, Justice Scalia. But

1 they did not comply with the 30-day notice period, which 2 is required -

3 QUESTION: You don't have to for - for 4 interpretive regulations.

5 MR. VERRILLI: But for rules with the force of 6 law you do.

7 QUESTION: For substantive regulations you have 8 to. You do not have to for interpretive regulations, but 9 that does not mean that an interpretive regulation does 10 not - is not entitled to Chevron deference and is not 11 fully as - as effective as - as laying down the rule of 12 law as a substantive regulation. That's never been the - 13 the rule.

14 MR. VERRILLI: The question here is whether the 15 agency intended this to be a rule of law or - or guidance 16 of its own enforcement authority, and it - and it clearly 17 intended the latter and it has acted in a manner 18 consistent with the fact that it's the latter and not the 19 former, because it routinely refuses to enforce the 20 principle that the Government is here advocating today.
21 Indeed, in every single instance in which this issue has 22 come before the Department of Labor and the Equal 23 Opportunity - and the EEOC - since the mid-1970's, in 24 every single instance the - the Department of Labor or the 25 EEOC has blessed a - an employment practice that provides

1 comparatively older workers with a benefit not available
2 to workers - to all workers 40 and older so -

3 QUESTION: Mr. - Mr. Verrilli, I - I will assume 4 you're - you're right on the - the application of Mead
5 here, so far as the reg goes. What about the - I think it 6 was the 1997 adjudication?

7 MR. VERRILLI: The 1997 adjudication, it seems to 8 me, is not something that can give rise to Chevron 9 deference, because that - they were just acting pursuant 10 to their own view of what the - of - of what their - what 11 the statute -

12 QUESTION: Wasn't it binding - wasn't it binding
13 on the parties before them?

14 MR. VERRILLI: It was binding on the parties,
15 Justice Souter, but, of course, even if - if the Court
16 were to conclude that under Mead you get Chevron
17 deference, and I don't think you can for that reason, you 18 still have the problem, in our view, which is the more 19 fundamental problem, which I'd like to address, which is 20 that -

21 QUESTION: Before you leave me, can I just read 22 you two sentences from Mead? First sentence says, it is 23 fair to assume generally that Congress - that Congress 24 contemplates administrative action with the effect of the 25 law when it provides for a relatively formal

1 administrative procedure, which you say doesn't exist
2 here. Next sentence, that said, and as significant as 3 notice and comment is in pointing to Chevron authority, 4 the want of that procedure here does not decide the case
5 for we have sometimes found reasons for Chevron deference 6 even when no such administrative formality was required 7 and none was afforded.

8 So, as I read that last sentence, I certainly 9 thought that if Congress so intends, we should give 10 Chevron deference to a rule that has not complied even 11 with notice and comment.

12 MR. VERRILLI: Yes -

13 QUESTION: So I couldn't read Mead as saying you 14 have to have that or you don't get the deference.

15 MR. VERRILLI: But I think the fundamental point 16 for us under Mead, and then I'd like to move back to the 17 main - the Chevron analysis, if I could, but the 18 fundamental point for us under Mead, Justice Breyer, is 19 that the agency made a deliberate decision here not to 20 have this rule be one that was a binding rule -

21 QUESTION: Well, I - I don't know how often an 22 agency says what this agency said here, that we are 23 promulgating this as an indication of how we intend to 24 enforce the law. And you're saying there is a chasm
25 between rules that are issued with that kind of a

1 statement and rules that are issued otherwise. The agency
2 says, in one case, this is the law, and in the other case, 3 this is how we interpret the law. I - I don't see that 4 that makes the difference.

5 MR. VERRILLI: I don't see how the agency could,
6 Justice Scalia, think that this had the force of law,
7 because they didn't follow it themselves in the manifold 8 in this decision of which the issue -

9 QUESTION: Well, that's - that's a different
10 point. That's a different point.

11 QUESTION: Well, isn't - isn't that your - isn't 12 that your stronger point that - that combined with the - 13 the relatively abbreviated procedure, they have, in fact, 14 in a number of instances not followed it and they have 15 never affirmatively, as - as a - as an administrative 16 movement, they have never affirmatively enforced it.
17 Isn't - isn't -

18 MR. VERRILLI: That's - that's all correct and we 19 - I think that does summarize our point more strongly.

20 QUESTION: Which I think goes to the Chevron 21 point.

22 MR. VERRILLI: Going - I agree with that, Justice 23 Souter - but going back to the main question of whether 24 you even get to ambiguity under Chevron, we submit that 25 the answer to that question is no, because Section 623(a)

1 is not to be read in isolation. The fundamental principle 2 of statutory construction is that it needs to be read in 3 context, and the relative contextual indicators here, we 4 submit, foreclose the argument that Congress intended in 5 the ADEA to authorize the kind of youth discrimination 6 claims that are at issue here.

7 QUESTION: Why, Mr. Verrilli, when we have - what 8 is it - 623(f)(2)(B) - that makes an express provision for 9 older worker versus younger worker. If that were the 10 general interpretation of the statute, then this specific 11 provision relating to an older worker vis-a-vis a younger 12 worker would be unnecessary.

13 MR. VERRILLI: I respectfully disagree with that, 14 Justice Ginsburg, and - and - I'm - I'm looking now at 15 page 3a of the statutory appendix to the Government's 16 brief where the - where provision is located. (B)(i) is 17 in the statute, as the preamble to the Older Worker
18 Benefit Protection Act states, to - to provide employers 19 with an affirmative defense to a charge that they have 20 discriminated against comparatively older workers by 21 providing them benefits at a lower level than 22 comparatively younger workers.

23 And what - what (B)(i) says, which I take it is 24 the provision Your Honor is referring to, is that, in that 25 situation, even though the comparatively older worker is

1 being disfavored, the comparatively older worker has an 2 affirmative defense, if the older worker can - if the 3 employer can show that the - that it spent as least as 4 much on the benefit for the older worker as it did for the 5 younger worker, even if the benefit is less, and so that - 6

7 QUESTION: Well, does that provision cover your 8 situation, do you think, here?

9 MR. VERRILLI: We - we -

10 QUESTION: I mean, could you fit yourself, your 11 client's situation, under that provision?

12 MR. VERRILLI: Yes, Justice O'Connor. We can 13 shoehorn ourselves into that provision.

14 QUESTION: And why - is that still pending in the 15 court below, that argument?

16 MR. VERRILLI: It is - it is still pending in the 17 court below. That's correct, Your Honor.

18 QUESTION: So, no matter what we do, you would 19 take the position that that provision will cover this 20 case?

21 MR. VERRILLI: We do think so, Your Honor. Of 22 course, the respondents won't agree with that, I'm quite 23 sure, and I - and I don't think that that's going to solve 24 the many problems that the Sixth Circuit's decision gave 25 rise to here. For example -

1 QUESTION: Well, that - that's my next point.
2 The - the briefs try to tell us that there's going to be 3 cataclysmic consequences if we don't rule your way. This 4 safe harbor provision gives very substantial protection 5 against that, does it not, or - or does it?

6 MR. VERRILLI: Yeah - let - if I - I think it
7 gives some protection, not complete protection, but I
8 think there are a whole range of other negative
9 consequences, Your Honor, that I'd like to address, if I
10 could, and then - and I will certainly directly address 11 the safe harbor provision.

12 First, there are a number of employment 13 practices out there where the nation's major employers 14 have engaged in efforts to retain older segments of the 15 workforce and to bring back elderly citizens back into the 16 workforce by doing such things as providing for workers 17 over a certain threshold age, very often 55, the ability 18 to work part-time rather than full-time, to have flex-
19 time schedules, to have - to have jobs that don't involve 20 travel. They've changed the terms, conditions, and 21 privileges of employment for people over a certain age to 22 keep them in the workforce.

23 The safe harbor here applies only to benefits, 24 Justice Kennedy, and therefore, would not protect that 25 kind of behavior, and although the United States talks

1 about the safe harbor with respect to benefits, I would 2 point out the brief of the United States is notably silent 3 on the question of whether the interpretation being 4 advocated here would make illegal that kind of conduct.
5 And we submit it would because it clearly prefers the 6 comparatively older to the comparatively younger with 7 respect to terms, conditions, and privileges of 8 employment, so -

9 QUESTION: Has the EEOC taken an enforcement 10 position with reference to some of the practices you've 11 just -

12 MR. VERRILLI: Yeah.

13 QUESTION: - or - or non-enforcement positions?

14 MR. VERRILLI: Yes, yes, they have. There are 15 DOL and EEOC letters which approve those practices, but 16 it's hard to see how one could possibly approve those 17 practices consistent with an interpretation of Section 18 623(a) that imposed a rigid rule of equality for everyone 19 40 and over.

20 QUESTION: One of the amicus briefs pointed to a 21 number of Internal Revenue Code provisions and ERISA 22 provisions that appear to be implicated if you go with the 23 Sixth Circuit view here, and perhaps would be in 24 opposition to the interpretation, given the language -

25 MR. VERRILLI: Yes -

1 QUESTION: - by the Sixth Circuit. Now, have you
2 commented on those various provisions?

3 MR. VERRILLI: We have, Justice O'Connor, and 4 this is actually the second category of adverse effect, it
5 seems to me, that you have if the - if this decision 6 stands and if the rule of law is what the - what the 7 Government advocates. Many of those provisions, which are 8 detailed quite effectively in the ERISA Committee brief, 9 provide for - for things such as employees with - employee 10 stock option plans, ESOP plans, are allowed, once they 11 become 55 years old, to diversify their stock holdings.
12 Employees, when they retire at 59-1/2 can withdraw money 13 from their retirement plans without facing the tax 14 penalty. There are a host of provisions like that.

15 One point to be made is that it seems to me 16 irreconcilable with the existence of those provisions to 17 interpret 623(a) this way, but the other point my - my 18 friends the respondents say, yeah, but you don't have to 19 worry about that because the rule that the later-enacted 20 statute governs over the former-enacted statute will take 21 care of it. I'm afraid that's not so for the following 22 reason. All of the examples I just gave, and many others 23 in the - in the ERISA Committee brief, were statutes that 24 Congress enacted before 1990, and I submit that 1990 is 25 the relevant date for the later-enacted statute, because

1 it has - has - that's the - the Older Worker Benefit 2 Protection Act was passed after Betts and it was passed in 3 1990, and it was that statute that made the ADEA 4 applicable for the first time to fringe benefits of the 5 kind that those regulations govern.

6 So you have a serious problem, at a very 7 minimum, with respect to all of those regulations, it 8 seems to me -

9 QUESTION: Mr. Verrilli, what do you do with 10 Section 623(e), which prohibits any advertising by an 11 employer indicating any preference, limitation,
12 specification, or discrimination based on age? Now, age 13 there could not possibly mean what you say it means in 14 623(a), that is, old age, because then it would just 15 prohibit preferring older people. So what do you say it 16 means then?

17 MR. VERRILLI: Well, I say -

18 QUESTION: It means young -

19 MR. VERRILLI: I - I -

20 QUESTION: In (a) it means old age and in (e) it 21 means young age?

22 MR. VERRILLI: I have a lot to say about it,
23 Justice Scalia. The first thing is this: The critique 24 that the Government levels at us with respect to that 25 provision is equally applicable to their interpretation.

1 What they say is that, you know, if it were lawful under 2 the statute to grant a preference for old age - it doesn't 3 make any sense to say that's it not lawful to advertise
4 for old age - of course, what - if - if age means 5 chronological age here, then you wouldn't be able to state 6 a preference for chronological age in an advertisement, 7 even though it would be perfectly lawful substantively to 8 have a policy that said you're going to open positions to 9 only people 40 or older.

10 So I don't think they get any mileage out of 11 that - out of that, because I think they've got the same 12 kind of linguistic difficulty that we have here with 13 respect to it. And I think what that shows, Justice 14 Scalia, is -

15 QUESTION: No, but it - it still has some meaning 16 and some beneficial effect with their interpretation, 17 whereas with your interpretation of age, it has no
18 conceivable beneficial effect. You have to read it there 19 as meaning young age and you read it in (a) as meaning old 20 age.

21 MR. VERRILLI: Well, I think you could read it as 22 meaning old age, but I think the truth of the matter is 23 that the word age is something of a chameleon. It's a 24 word that is very sensitive to context and it's going to 25 have somewhat different connotations throughout this

1 statute, and I think it's quite clear that it does. It's 2 a different connotation, for example, in Section B of the 3 statement of findings and purposes, where it's quite clear
4 that Congress is not talking about chronological age. It 5 has a different connotation in the seniority provision, 6 which you can find at page 3a of the Government's 7 statutory appendix, which talks about involuntary 8 retirement, down near the bottom of the page, that an 9 employer's plan cannot require the involuntary retirement 10 of any individual specified by subsection 631 of this 11 title because of the age of such individual.

12 Now, in a sense, that means chronological age, 13 but not in the sense that my friends on the other side say 14 about 623(a), because what it means really is once you've 15 become old enough that you've bumped up against the age
16 limit, and there are other provisions in 623 in which age
17 functions in exactly that way. I just don't think - I
18 think this really is a case like Robinson against Shell
19 Oil, where the word employee takes on different 20 connotations in different sections, like - like Scheidler, 21 where the word enterprise in the various subsections of 22 RICO takes on different connotations depending on exactly 23 how it's being used. I think the word age here takes on 24 different connotations in different sections in the 25 statute.

1 QUESTION: You must have thought of this and 2 tried it out. It doesn't work, but as I was reading it I
3 thought perhaps individual might refer to older
4 individual.

5 MR. VERRILLI: Well, I think - I -

6 QUESTION: If - I mean, but that must not, but 7 I'm sure - why didn't it work? Because if you - if you -
8 if you have - if you read individual throughout - cite 9 (1)(a)(i) is older individual. The only place it has bite
10 is where you get to the end, because of such older 11 individuals -

12 MR. VERRILLI: I think - we've thought about it
13 in this sense, Justice Breyer, and I think it dovetails 14 what I - what I think is our key contextual point, which 15 is that statute only protects people 40 and older, and if 16 what Congress was concerned about was a rule that 17 precluded arbitrary discrimination in favor of the 18 comparatively old as well as the comparatively young, it's 19 an exceedingly strange thing to do to draw a line at age 20 40, because, of course, people under 40 are much more 21 likely to be subject to discrimination on the ground that 22 they're comparatively too young than are people over 40.

23 QUESTION: I - I thought it was a big deal when 24 you had your 40th birthday, I mean -

25 (Laughter.)

1 MR. VERRILLI: Not anymore, Your Honor.

2 (Laughter.)

3 QUESTION: But is it -

4 MR. VERRILLI: But in any -

5 QUESTION: - isn't the - isn't the answer to - to 6 the - to the argument that you've just made is that as - 7 as a general proposition, anything that in effect
8 interrupts or skews employment for somebody over the age 9 of 40 is very difficult for somebody over the age of 40 to 10 deal with, regardless of which way the discrimination is 11 working? That is not as a general rule true of younger 12 people, and that's why it would make sense for - for the - 13 for the interpretation that - that was being suggested, to 14 draw the line at 40.

15 MR. VERRILLI: I - I think - I think that's the - 16 the best statement of the argument on the other side and 17 I think it's the Government's effort to defend the line on 18 that basis, but I don't think it works, because the reason 19 that people 40 and over have a problem once they suffer an 20 adverse employment action - and the Government itself 21 acknowledges this in its argument - is because they are 22 then subject to discrimination on the ground that they 23 perceive - they are perceived as being too old. That's 24 the problem, and that's the only problem the Government 25 has been able to identify that people 40 and over suffer

1 is that kind of -

2 QUESTION: Well, the 41-year-olds are perceived 3 as being too old in relation to people less than 41, and 4 it still means that when somebody looks at a 41-year-old, 5 they - the 41-year-old is just not as attractive an 6 employee as somebody, you know, a year - a year younger or 7 two years younger.

8 MR. VERRILLI: Yes, Justice Souter. I think 9 that's true, but - but 623(a) isn't an all-purpose 10 prohibition of arbitrary employment decisions respecting 11 people 40 and over, and after all, that same kind of 12 critique could be made of - if an employee is fired 13 because they're not fit enough or they have the wrong 14 color hair or -

15 QUESTION: Mr. Verrilli, it does - what Justice
16 Souter suggested does fit with the comment of Senator
17 Yarborough that was put out, that said that the 42-year-18 old would have a claim if the 52-year-old were preferred, 19 say, for hiring or promotion.

20 MR. VERRILLI: It - it does. That's the only 21 thing in the voluminous history of this - of this 22 enactment and all of its amendments that provides any 23 support for the Government's view here in response, but it 24 - and it - but it does provide some support for that, I
25 agree. But I really think -

1 QUESTION: The - the part of your explanation
2 about the - the diminished hurt to the 40-year-old was 3 within the - was within the universe of society as a 4 whole, but within the context of his own or her own
5 company, this is hurtful. These are people at that age 6 who have younger children being educated and so forth, and 7 if they find discrimination within their company, it 8 doesn't help much for you to say, well, society as a whole 9 doesn't discriminate against.

10 MR. VERRILLI: I think - I think, Justice 11 Kennedy, that it's - it's important to go back to the 12 source for this statute to understand what Congress was 13 trying to do, the circumstances of enactment of this 14 statute. After all, Congress could have, either in 1964, 15 when it passed Title VII, or in 1967, when it enacted this 16 statute, simply have put the word age into Title VII and 17 had it operate in exactly the same manner Title VII does.
18 But it made a deliberate choice not to do that.

19 The reason it did, I submit, is because the 20 recommendations of the Secretary of Labor in response to 21 the directive of Congress were that the problem of age 22 discrimination in the workplace is fundamentally different 23 than the problem of - than the problems that were 24 addressed by Title VII. And the critical difference is 25 this, that the - the kinds of discrimination that Title

1 VII addressed was discrimination on the basis of 2 characteristics that are always irrelevant to a decision 3 about who should be hired, fired, or promoted, or demoted.
4 And what the Secretary of Labor said is that age is 5 different, the age is not always irrelevant, age 6 distinctions are not always arbitrary, and I submit the 7 Court - the opinion for the Court in Betts identified 8 exactly that principle, that this is a different kind of 9 problem warranting a different kind of solution.

10 The problem was that there are stereotypes that 11 exist that - that - on which employers act that - that 12 prospective employees are - don't have the competence or 13 the productivity to handle a job because they are too old, 14 and that was the problem that this statute tried to 15 address and it's why it tried to address it in such a 16 fundamentally different manner than Title VII. Context 17 makes all the difference here. Again, and - and I think 18 the Court really did recognize that in Betts. Justice
19 Kennedy, in Betts, you had the operative language 20 privileges - terms, conditions, and privileges of 21 employment, identical in Title VII to - and the ADEA.

22 But what the Court concluded in Betts was that 23 that language had a different meaning. In Title VII it 24 included fringe benefits. In the ADEA it did not include 25 fringe benefits, and the reason for that was because

1 reading the provision not in isolation, but in the context
2 of the rest of the statute, it was quite clear that Title 3 - that the ADEA was meant to address a different kind of 4 problem, and that there was age-based decision-making that 5 was appropriate and not invidious and that ought not to be 6 prohibited by law. And I submit that the kind of age-7 based decision-making that's at issue in this case is 8 precisely the kind of age-based decision-making that 9 Congress did not want to make unlawful.

10 And the reason for this is quite - is quite 11 simply that people at the end of their working lives are 12 in a different position, especially with respect to 13 retirement security measure, which is what at issue - is 14 at issue here, even than a 41-year-old, someone else in 15 the protected class. And so when an employer acts, as 16 General Dynamics did here, with the union, to come up with 17 a solution that protected them from a harsh outcome and 18 protected their reliance interests, it's simply not 19 anything remotely within the contemplation of Congress
20 when it - when it - in the prohibitory - prohibitory
21 sections of the ADEA. If the Court -

22 QUESTION: Do we know the numbers, Mr. Verrilli?
23 We have, I think, some 200 people in the class that's 24 suing the 40 to 49-year-old. How many were grandfathered
25 in the 50 -

1 MR. VERRILLI: I - I believe it's - I believe 2 it's a comparable number, but I have to confess, Your 3 Honor, I don't know for sure what the exact number is. If 4 the Court has no further questions, I'd like to reserve
5 the balance of my time.

6 QUESTION: Very well, Mr. Verrilli.

7 Mr. Biggerman, we'll hear from you.

8 ORAL ARGUMENT OF MARK W. BIGGERMAN
9 ON BEHALF OF RESPONDENTS

10 MR. BIGGERMAN: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
11 please the Court:

12 The real issue here is whether this Court should 13 add an additional element to the ADEA's prohibition
14 language. And the answer, we submit, is no. The ADEA
15 prohibits discrimination against individuals 40 years old 16 or older because of their age, not because of their older 17 age. Petitioner would have this Court change that 18 language to require that individuals 40 and older also be 19 relatively older than any other group of employees with 20 whom they -

21 QUESTION: Mr. Biggerman, how do you deal with 22 the relaxed physical tests for, say, 50 or over? As Mr.
23 Verrilli mentioned, the flex-time, the reduced hours for 24 people who are well over 40 - 55, say, so that the - could 25 - could the 40 to 55 age group then sue because they have

1 to meet in full the physical fitness requirements, they 2 can't have the flex-time, they can't have the reduced 3 hours?

4 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, those are encompassed
5 in affirmative defenses. What we are asserting here is 6 simply whether the respondents have a cause of action.

7 QUESTION: So is your answer yes, that would be 8 discrimination? It might be a defense but it would be 9 prohibited discrimination under this Act to make those 10 special accommodations to older workers?

11 MR. BIGGERMAN: That would be prohibited subject 12 to an affirmative defense.

13 QUESTION: What would the affirmative defense be?

14 MR. BIGGERMAN: For example, a bona fide 15 occupational qualification.

16 QUESTION: Why in the world would that be a BFOQ?
17 You don't have to be over 55 to do the job, quite the 18 contrary. Special accommodations are being made so that 19 they're able to do the job. It doesn't fit with any BFOQ
20 decision that I know. It's a very extraordinary 21 applicational definition of BFOQ, bona fide occupation 22 qualification essential to the job.

23 QUESTION: So what happens is that a piece of 24 legislation that everybody thought was meant to aid older 25 workers, especially those towards the end of their working

1 careers, ends up harming them. You - you - you cannot 2 make special arrangements to let them do flex-time. You
3 can't make these accommodations - a very strange 4 consequence of this legislation.

5 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, we - we - we submit 6 that Congress set forth specific examples as to when there 7 are exceptions that can be made.

8 QUESTION: But do you have - the exceptions are 9 in the statute. You gave me the BFOQ, I think it's quite 10 clear that that wouldn't work in this case. What else 11 would be? We have, as you said, this would be 12 discrimination. How could the employer then defend 13 against it? What is there in the statute that would give 14 the employer an affirmative defense?

15 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, what would give the 16 employer an affirmative defense to have, as you said, a 17 more - to permit - if you could repeat the example?

18 QUESTION: To make special accommodations to 19 older workers, no physical fitness test, shorter hours, 20 flex-time, and that's not available to people who are 21 under 55, say.

22 MR. BIGGERMAN: Well, I - I think that - let me
23 expand a little on my answer. I think that Congress' goal
24 here was to make age a neutral factor in employment. Now, 25 I don't think that Congress intended to permit any special

1 considerations for age unless they're set forth in the 2 statute.

3 QUESTION: But what about all the sections in 4 ERISA and in the Internal Revenue Code that allow various 5 provisions for benefit plans, for retirement, and for 6 stock option exercise and so forth that are going to be at 7 odds with your interpretation.

8 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor -

9 QUESTION: I mean, there are a whole array of 10 laws that will be directly affected if the Sixth Circuit
11 view is affirmed. Now, what do we do about all that? Do 12 you think Congress really intended such a result?

13 MR. BIGGERMAN: I don't think that the ADEA
14 conflicts with those provisions because a cause of action, 15 unlike in this case, 12(b)(6), this case should not have 16 been dismissed, it should have been allowed to go forward.
17 And in the employer - in any situation which those 18 regulations or those statutory provisions under some other
19 law - IRS -

20 QUESTION: One thing - I see that point - that 21 one thing that everybody, I think, is saying in one form 22 or another, is one thing that isn't covered in 2 is hiring 23 and firing people. So every time an employer dismisses a 24 person over the age of 40, he will either be hit with a 25 lawsuit by the older one, or if he tries to lean over a

1 little backwards in favor of the older - and I don't want 2 to be too prejudiced in favor of the older though I am in 3 that category - the - the point is that every time he then 4 tries to be at all sympathetic to the older person, the 5 younger one hits him with a lawsuit.

6 And so what the Federal courts become is an 7 employment court to discover in each instance whether 8 there was cause, and moreover, no employer could possibly 9 lean over even a little bit favorable towards an older 10 person, and that's why I think what we're saying is your - 11 I would say it - your interpretation will blow up this 12 Act, destroy it. An Act that was intended to help older 13 people will now suddenly become an Act which turns Federal 14 courts into labor courts, deciding in each case that 15 anything happens to a person over the age of 40, whether 16 the employer was or was not justified. Now - now that is 17 - I'm putting it strongly, but I want to hear what I think 18 they're telling you on the other side, which is what I 19 thought I was articulating.

20 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, I would - I would 21 analogize that to this Court's decision in McDonald v.
22 Santa Fe, when, prior to that in McDonnell Douglas, this 23 Court said - set forth the first prima facie requirement
24 as requiring a minority under Title VI. Yet in McDonald
25 v. Santa Fe it said no because of sex. That is when you

1 can sue like in the Age Act.

2 QUESTION: Well, that - that brings me back to 3 the answer you gave to Justice Ginsburg's question and it 4 was again reflected in Justice Breyer's. Am I correct in 5 inferring from your answer - I don't think you said it
6 quite this way - that in Justice Ginsburg's hypothetical 7 regarding flex-time and - and no physical fitness test, 8 you would say that there is a violation there? That's 9 what I carry away from your - from your answer to her, and 10 that directly relates to Justice Breyer's concern that he 11 just expressed.

12 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, I must - I must 13 humbly confess that I don't have a grasp of the entire 14 statute in every situation in every regulation. I wish at 15 this moment I did. But I would give you the general 16 answer, that Congress intended to make age neutral, and if 17 there were no exception, no exemption in the statute or no 18 regulation that provided an affirmative defense, then that 19 would be impermissible if it was based on age.

20 QUESTION: Now, I - I have to tell you that - 21 that as currently advised, that seems to me so fanciful a 22 version of what Congress intended that I would not 23 interpret the statute that way. Now, I will go along with 24 you if you can tell me that, with respect to this 25 ambiguous statute, I am bound by Chevron or Mead to - to

1 accord deference to the agency's interpretation. Your - 2 your - the people on the other side say that there's no
3 such requirement. Do you think there is a requirement
4 here?

5 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, I definitely think 6 that deference is -

7 QUESTION: What are you relying on? The agency
8 guideline?

9 MR. BIGGERMAN: 1625.2 of the interpretive
10 guideline. Is that what you're referring to?

11 QUESTION: Yes.

12 MR. BIGGERMAN: Yes, which was also supported by 13 the agency adjudication in the 1997 adjudication, which 14 was confirmed by the entire commission, which is the only

16 QUESTION: Do - do you agree with the description
17 of the other side that that was not promulgated by notice
18 and comment rule-making?

19 MR. BIGGERMAN: It was my understanding that the 20 EEOC promulgated it by notice and comment.

21 QUESTION: Yes, but they said that they did it
22 simply to go along with the Carter administration's 23 request or requirement that even interpretive rules be 24 promulgated by notice and comment rule-making even though 25 the ADA does not require that. Now, that's what they

1 actually wrote in their brief, and is that accurate?

2 MR. BIGGERMAN: It's - it's my understanding that 3 that is accurate.

4 QUESTION: All right. If that is accurate, why 5 would Congress have intended, and the relevant pages of 6 Mead use the word Congress in one paragraph five times to 7 try to figure out what Congress wanted in this respect, 8 why would Congress have wanted the courts to defer to this 9 kind of interpretive regulation, which if it's taken 10 seriously would destroy Congress' own ends? That's a 11 pretty tough question.

12 MR. BIGGERMAN: It is.

13 QUESTION: I'm putting it - I'm overstating these 14 slightly because I want to elicit clear answers from you.

15 MR. BIGGERMAN: I - I - it's not my belief that 16 this goes against Congress' intentions. I think the 17 Congress set out to set forth specific exemptions, 18 including the Older Workers Benefit Protection Act, in 19 which there are instances when older workers can be 20 favored, and so therefore I don't think it went against 21 Congress' intention. I mean, the Older Workers Benefit 22 Protection Act set forth a whole bunch of additional 23 exemptions after this regulation was already in place.

24 QUESTION: Mr. Biggerman, may I ask you two 25 questions? The first question is, when was the statute

1 enacted?

2 MR. BIGGERMAN: The ADEA?

3 QUESTION: Yes. I think the sponsor of the 4 statute, the Secretary of Labor, was a former law
5 professor of mine, so I think it goes back quite a ways.

6 (Laughter.)

7 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, I - I think you're 8 right.

9 QUESTION: Well, it's a good many years ago,
10 wasn't it?

11 MR. BIGGERMAN: It was a good many years ago.

12 QUESTION: And the second question is, what - 13 what is your comment on this sentence in the district
14 court's opinion: Every Federal court to address the issue 15 has held that a claim of reverse age discrimination is not 16 cognizable under ADA. This suggests that there's a long 17 history of viewing the statute in one - one way and that 18 perhaps there are substantial reliance interests out there 19 that would build up over a period of many, many years.
20 Would you comment on that aspect of the case?

21 MR. BIGGERMAN: I - that statement by the 22 district court was incorrect. The decision in the 23 Mississippi Light - Mississippi Power and Light decision 24 had been rendered before the district court's decision and 25 that was at least one decision that -

1 QUESTION: When was that case decided? Just 2 shortly before the district court's decision?

3 MR. BIGGERMAN: No, Your Honor, it was a little 4 bit before that and I'm looking for the cite.

5 QUESTION: Well, isn't it true though, as a
6 general matter, the courts had generally read the statute 7 the way the district court read it?

8 MR. BIGGERMAN: As - as a - see, Your Honor,
9 Hamilton came out and then all of the district courts
10 followed the Seventh Circuit's decision in Hamilton 11 without really interpreting the ADEA. They just simply 12 followed that. So, yes, there is a body. The majority of 13 the body did go in that direction, but simply relied on 14 the Hamilton -

15 QUESTION: But do you think that the - the 16 business community has - was justified in relying on that 17 rule for a good many years?

18 MR. BIGGERMAN: I don't think so, Your Honor. I
19 think in light of the EEOC -

20 QUESTION: You think the statute's so clear?

21 MR. BIGGERMAN: The statute and the EEOC -

22 QUESTION: The EEOC during all this period
23 continued to say that - that it worked both ways, didn't 24 it?

25 MR. BIGGERMAN: Not in its only binding opinion.

1 In its only binding opinion it followed the language of 2 1625. The letters, the opinion letters by the Secretary - 3 the Department of Labor - and the EEOC before, those 4 aren't binding. The binding -

5 QUESTION: Well, the question isn't whether 6 they're binding. The question is whether the business 7 community could rely on them. I mean, here are your - 8 your - you have this guideline out there, this regulation, 9 I would say, and incidentally I don't know why you accept 10 the proposition that interpretive regulations are somehow 11 different from substantive regulations insofar as their 12 authoritativeness is concerned, but you have the 13 regulation out there, but you have the agency saying to 14 the business community in an opinion letter, don't worry 15 about it, we're not going to enforce it that way, and 16 indeed we're going to amend the regulation. Now, you 17 know, what - what - what am I to make about that as far as 18 Chevron deference is concerned?

19 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, I would - I would ask 20 that you look at the top at the commission and what they 21 did in the binding opinion, and I think that is what is 22 entitled to Chevron deference.

23 QUESTION: But the - the regulation itself seems 24 to have some internal tension, if not inconsistency, 25 because what you're relying on is what it says in

1 1625.2(a) and then (b) goes on to say, but the extension 2 of additional benefits, such as increased severance pay to 3 older employees within the protected group, may be lawful 4 when the employer has a reasonable basis to conclude that 5 those benefits will counteract problems related to age 6 discrimination. That seems to be just a recognition that 7 the older you get, the more problems you have, and so if 8 you can - if this - this regulation says, yes, you can 9 give benefits.

10 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, again I would come 11 back to the - the statement that in order to fulfill the 12 requirements set forward in (b), a reasonable basis, you 13 need facts. That's an affirmative defense, which we don't 14 have here. That goes above and beyond a simple cause of 15 action. The employer could use that as an affirmative 16 defense to defend its action.

17 QUESTION: Not unless there's a law allowing it.
18 I don't see one. I mean, there is no provision unless you 19 shoehorn it under this (B)(i) section, that allows any out 20 for the employer, is there?

21 MR. BIGGERMAN: I - I don't understand.

22 QUESTION: For the employ - well, I'm taking up 23 your time. You have only a few minutes left. I just 24 don't see a provision allowing the affirmative defense.

25 MR. BIGGERMAN: Am I to understand you, Justice

1 O' Connor, that you don't see a provision in the statute
2 that allows the same affirmative defense as in this 3 regulation? That's correct. This - this is outside, but 4 again, it's the EEOC interpreting the Act. As we all 5 know, a statute doesn't cover every instance. Does that 6 answer your question or would you like me to go -

7 QUESTION: Go ahead.

8 MR. BIGGERMAN: Okay. I - I would just like to 9 say that the Age Discrimination Act, the prohibition 10 language says, because of age, and this Court has before, 11 in Consolidated Coin, ruled that the fact that one 12 individual loses out to another individual within the 13 protected class, it doesn't matter. It's because - it's 14 whether the individual loses out because of age. That - 15 that's the critical thing here. The -

16 QUESTION: The example that's given in the paper 17 is the - the 51-year-old and a 42-year-old are both 18 applying for a job and no matter which one gets it you 19 can't discriminate on account of age. How could a 20 decision to employ the 51-year-old be a discrimination on 21 account of age? What - what would be in the employer's 22 mind if it's an age-based decision?

23 MR. BIGGERMAN: Your Honor, are you asking me for 24 an example as to why someone might want to hire -

25 QUESTION: How - how could that - how could that,

1 within the meaning of the statute, be a discrimination on 2 account of age if they hired the older person?

3 MR. BIGGERMAN: Congress found that at age 40 and 4 over any discrimination on the basis of age injures the 5 individual.

6 QUESTION: But the decision to hire the older 7 person, how could that be a - would it have to be just the 8 unique situation where the employer doesn't like 42-year-9 olds?

10 MR. BIGGERMAN: Well, it - there may be - the 11 employer may want a situation where they want the prestige
12 of having someone with gray hair as opposed to less gray 13 hair for a consultant position or for a television 14 anchorman.

15 QUESTION: Well, that wouldn't be discrimination
16 on the basis of age. You just like gray-haired people.
17 Some young people have gray hair.

18 QUESTION: They'd be just in favor of gray-
19 haired people, yeah.

20 (Laughter.)

21 MR. BIGGERMAN: But - but if - if they had a 22 requirement in their policy that it had to be only 51 or 23 older -

24 QUESTION: Well, it's -

25 MR. BIGGERMAN: Right.

1 QUESTION: You could be 51 and still have dark
2 hair. Some of us -

3 (Laughter.)

4 QUESTION: Maybe they're moved by humanity, or is 5 that an unfortunate thing to take into account in the law?

6 MR. BIGGERMAN: It - it is not, Your Honor.

7 QUESTION: So maybe they want to keep this older 8 person around because it's the decent thing to do -

9 MR. BIGGERMAN: But the statute -

10 QUESTION: - and then the younger person comes in 11 and sues.

12 MR. BIGGERMAN: The statute prohibits
13 discrimination on the basis of age. It just simply sets 14 the protected class at 40 and over. That's our argument.
15 If there are no further questions.

16 QUESTION: Thank you, Mr. Biggerman.

17 Mr. Clement, we'll hear from you.

18 ORAL ARGUMENT OF PAUL D. CLEMENT

19 ON BEHALF OF THE UNITED STATES AS AMICUS CURIAE

20 SUPPORTING THE RESPONDENTS

21 MR. CLEMENT: Mr. Chief Justice, and may it
22 please the Court:

23 Absent an affirmative defense, the Age
24 Discrimination in Employment Act prohibits discrimination
25 on the basis of age against members of the protected class

1 and is not limited to claims brought by the older members 2 of the class.

3 QUESTION: Mr. Clement, now, Justice Ginsburg
4 gave some examples of employment practices that favor 5 older persons, for which I don't think there's an 6 affirmative defense. Am I correct that there isn't?

7 MR. CLEMENT: There's no affirmative defense in 8 the statute, Justice Stevens, and let me address those 9 hypotheticals, because I think these seemingly benevolent 10 instances of using age may be beguiling, but I think in 11 reality even those benevolent uses of age implicate the 12 interests and concerns of the Age Act. Take, for example, 13 an employer who's willing to exempt employees over 50 from 14 a physical fitness test. Well, the first question I would 15 ask is, if you're willing to exempt workers over 50 from 16 the physical fitness test, is the physical fitness test 17 really a legitimate occupational qualification? And 18 should that be used to exclude workers between 40 and 50 19 from the workplace?

20 QUESTION: Let's take the hours because you
21 certainly couldn't use that claim that that - that maybe 22 you didn't need this test. The claim isn't that it 23 necessarily screens out the older workers, but the 24 employer doesn't want to put them through the strain of 25 the test. But let's - let's move to the flexible hours,

1 reduced work hours, we're not going to give those benefits 2 to younger people within the protected class, only 50 and 3 over.

4 MR. CLEMENT: Justice Ginsburg, it seems to me
5 that stereotypes that older workers are going to be more 6 strained and can't work as hard and need time off are 7 precisely the stereotypes the Act is designed to prohibit.
8 Now, it's different if a worker -

9 QUESTION: Well then, how - how in the world
10 could the agency then adopt 1625.2(b) that allows 11 increased benefits to older workers if the employer can 12 show that those older people have more problems?

13 MR. CLEMENT: Justice Ginsburg, 1625.2(b) is 14 limited to benefits, and Charles Shaner, who's the general
15 counsel of the EEOC at the time that the Older Worker 16 Benefit Protection Act was passed, explained that the 17 statutory affirmative defense that would be implicated 18 here on remand, 623(f)(2)(B)(i), is a simplification of 19 that regulatory defense. And I think what the Act as a 20 general matter does is it recognizes that benefits are 21 more difficult because it's tied up with issues of 22 retirement age and the like, and so a more flexible 23 approach is necessary with respect to benefits.

24 But with respect to core employment, hiring,
25 firing, promotion, and compensation, the Act reflects a

1 judgement, as stated in the purpose, that they want to 2 promote the employment of older people on the basis -

3 QUESTION: Now, Mr. Clement, just - I want to be 4 sure I have an answer to my question. With respect to 5 employment practices, such as that described, am I correct 6 in - in agreeing that if an employer uses a stereotype to 7 - to reach that conclusion, there would be no affirmative 8 defense for it?

9 MR. CLEMENT: I - I think that's right. Unless 10 this Court were, I mean, if this Court has a - has a very 11 flexible view of age in the prohibition, I suppose it 12 could allow the agency to adopt a flexible affirmative 13 defense along the lines of Weber. Let me also -

14 QUESTION: Why not?

15 MR. CLEMENT: Let me also say that the statute 16 specifically gives the EEOC, in 29 U.S.C. 628, the 17 regulatory authority to make exemptions, and I think if 18 there are specific concerns with particular practices that 19 seem benevolent and are benevolent, then the EEOC can make 20 a regulatory exemption. But with respect to these 21 seemingly benevolent -

22 QUESTION: Where - where is that authority?

23 MR. CLEMENT: 29 U.S.C. 628. It's in the 24 statutory appendix, I believe at page 4a, and that - and 25 that is - that is a sweeping authority. It gives the EEOC

1 both the authority to make interpretive regulations and 2 substantive exemptions from the statute.

3 QUESTION: Well - well if - if your submission is 4 that stereotypes are - are deplored and prohibited by the 5 Act, how could the EEOC make an exemption to the contrary?

6 MR. CLEMENT: Well, I think, as I said, if - I 7 think that - that the Act is perfectly consistent with the 8 idea that these stereotypes should play no role. The 9 purpose clause of the statute says it wants to promote the 10 employment of older workers, but how does it say it wants 11 to promote the employment of older workers? By having 12 them judged on their ability rather than age. And I think 13 it reflects a judgement that an employer that has age in 14 mind and not ability when trying to favor an older worker 15 is not going to be able to reverse the process when 16 they're working to the detriment of a worker.

17 QUESTION: So then in any instance in which the 18 employer quite honestly is moved by some human feeling 19 that is related to an older person, that the Act would 20 rule out?

21 MR. CLEMENT: I - I think that's right, Justice
22 Breyer, but what's -

23 QUESTION: All right. Now, is there any reason 24 to think that that's what Congress had in mind, any reason 25 to think that it - that it - that it really wanted in this

1 respect, because most human beings are moved by these 2 kinds of emotions, they wanted to prohibit that?

3 MR. CLEMENT: Two responses, Justice Breyer.

4 First -

5 QUESTION: Helps other people.

6 MR. CLEMENT: First, I think that the natural 7 human instinct to favor an older worker would be to cut a 8 break to a worker who's been with the company many years, 9 and if that's what an employer wants to do, it's perfectly
10 free under the Age Act to say, if you've been with us 30 11 years or 20 years, we're going to cut you a break. To the 12 extent that's not the motivation, but it's purely age-13 based, then there is an indication in the statutory 14 history, and that indication is the colloquy between 15 Senators -

16 QUESTION: I thought that was ambiguous, somewhat
17 ambiguous.

18 MR. CLEMENT: Well, the colloquy is not at all
19 ambiguous.

20 QUESTION: Who - who heard that colloquy? I
21 mean, were they the only two people on the floor? I'm 22 really supposed to get -

23 (Laughter.)

24 MR. CLEMENT: Justice Scalia, all I can tell you 25 is that -

1 QUESTION: We don't really know, do we?

2 MR. CLEMENT: Justice Scalia, I can tell you
3 this. The same number of people heard that colloquy as 4 heard the colloquy that this Court relied on between the 5 same two Senators in interpreting the Age Act in Betts and 6 in United Airlines against McMann. On two occasions this 7 Court has recognized that those two Senators have 8 important views on the Age Act because they were the 9 principal sponsors and the floor managers of the bill, and 10 as the icing on the cake, the Court relied on Senator 11 Javits again in the Criswell case. But -

12 QUESTION: How - how much use has the EEOC made 13 of Section 628 when it can issue exemptions or that sort 14 of thing?

15 MR. CLEMENT: Mr. Chief Justice, I don't know the 16 exact number of times, but I know there is a pending 17 exemption right now that's been - that's been promulgated

19 QUESTION: Are there - are there - are there 20 other exemptions that have actually been granted?

21 MR. CLEMENT: There - there are, Mr. Chief 22 Justice, and the one that they're working on now is to 23 give employers greater flexibility to coordinate their 24 retirement benefits with Medicare benefits in response to 25 a Third Circuit decision in the Erie County case -

1 QUESTION: Well, may I ask -

2 MR. CLEMENT: - so that's not just statutory 3 authority that's never been used.

4 QUESTION: May I ask you a similar question? To 5 what extent has - how many enforcement proceedings has the 6 EEOC commenced to - to enforce the reverse discrimination 7 aspect of this statute?

8 MR. CLEMENT: Justice Stevens, there's one time
9 where they did enforce it and that was a full committee 10 proceeding. The decision was circulated to the full 11 commission, so that is a binding decision on the 12 commission.

13 QUESTION: So they did - there is one example of 14 an enforcement action?

15 MR. CLEMENT: Right.

16 QUESTION: In all these years, only one?

17 MR. CLEMENT: Well, but there are only a handful 18 of examples that go the other way and with - I think it's 19 important to understand that with respect to the entire 20 universe of EEOC decisions, as opposed to Department of 21 Labor decisions, there's this one decision that comes up 22 in a non-benefits context where they apply the regulation.
23 There are three other decisions that come up in a benefits
24 context -

25 QUESTION: In that - in that very context, Mr.

1 Clement, you didn't mention this Court's decision in 2 O'Connor against Consolidated Coin, where was it the 52-3 year-old had a claim for relief when the 41-year-old was 4 preferred. If I understand your argument, you - you are 5 saying that equally the 41-year-old would have - have a 6 claim if the 52-year-old were preferred?

7 MR. CLEMENT: That's correct, Justice Ginsburg.
8 That's exactly what the Senate colloquy said that - and 9 that colloquy was picked up in the regulation, which is a 10 binding regulation with notice and comment rule-making.

11 QUESTION: It says in the colloquy -

12 QUESTION: Well, leave - leave - no, please go 13 ahead.

14 QUESTION: It says in the colloquy, could not 15 turn down either.

16 MR. CLEMENT: Right. There would be -

17 QUESTION: It doesn't - they were clear, turn 18 down either -

19 MR. CLEMENT: Right.

20 QUESTION: - and choose the other. It could be - 21 can't -

22 MR. CLEMENT: No. It said there would be 23 discrimination whichever way the decision went, and I 24 don't think that's all that unusual. I mean, anytime in 25 the Title VII context that you have an employee who's

1 fired for sex or race -

2 QUESTION: Whichever way it went, if it was -

3 MR. CLEMENT: - somebody will sue.

4 QUESTION: - whichever way it went, if it was 5 based on age, I still don't understand how one could hire 6 the 51 because he discriminates against 42-year-olds.

7 MR. CLEMENT: I - I think, Justice Stevens, you 8 could have a presumption or a stereotype that older 9 workers are going to be better. I suppose it's also true 10 that you could have a situation where, for some other 11 benefits reason, an older worker wasn't going to have as 12 many benefits or would get paid less -

13 QUESTION: But the problem with your stereotype 14 argument that the Government's trying to drive out of 15 people's minds age, just the way it's trying to drive out 16 of people's minds race, sex, and the other things against 17 which you can't discriminate, is that the Government 18 doesn't try to drive it out of their minds, it only - only 19 over 40. Under 40 it's perfectly okay to have these - 20 these - these thoughts of age. You just simply cannot 21 regard this statute as a statute that is directed against 22 some moral disapproval of - of taking age into account.

23 MR. CLEMENT: Justice Scalia, the statute, when 24 it was originally enacted, had the protected class only 25 between 40 and 65, so I don't think the fact it's - now

1 only has a lower bound tells you anything in particular 2 about the prohibition.

3 QUESTION: Mr. -

4 MR. CLEMENT: And I thought you said it well for 5 the Court in the Consolidated Coin case that this is not a 6 statute about protecting individuals against the burden of 7 being over 40 or to protect against over-40ism. It 8 protects people in the protected class, which is crystal-9 clearly defined to be individuals over 40, from 10 discrimination because of age. The Act doesn't care if 11 the worker in the protected class who loses out is the 12 younger of the two. The Act is triggered whenever an 13 individual in the protected class loses out because of his 14 or her age. Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

15 QUESTION: Thank you, Mr. Clement. .

16 Mr. Verrilli, you have 4 minutes remaining.

17 MR. VERRILLI: Thank you, Mr. Chief Justice.

18 We're prepared to submit our case.

19 CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST: Very well. The Court -
20 the case is submitted.

21 (Whereupon, at 11:03 a.m., the case in the 22 above-entitled matter was submitted.)
